

EDITORIAL COMMENT

This Special Issue of the University of Zambia Journal of Law and Social Sciences was prepared by the Department of Primary Education of the School of Education at University of Zambia. It was a product of the Knowledge Innovation Exchange (KIX) funded project, which ran under the title, “Scaling the School Readiness Initiative: Strengthening School and Community Capacities for Adoption of Play-based Learning in Uganda and Zambia”. The project was implemented by a consortium led by the Zambia Open Community Schools in partnership with the University of Zambia and Makerere University of Uganda. This Special Issue presents knowledge generated during the project life cycle by the University of Zambia Team and addresses issues of Play-based Learning, School Readiness and Transition from Early Childhood Education (ECE) to Primary Education in community schools and government schools.
